

Tech Tip

December 2011

By: Monica Allen, GHS

Looking for new or fresh ideas on how to integrate technology into your lesson? Not sure what options are even available to you? Then I have just the thing for you – a blog!

Blogs, if you aren't aware, are like online journals – a place to share ideas, comments, etc. There are a lot out there, but there is one in particular that I think is a great resource for all educators – it's called K12EduBuzz.com.

This particular blog is written by Jean Tower, the Director of Technology for both Northborough and Southborough school districts. In this blog, Judy compiles articles, quotes, books, and webinars, just to name a few, all revolving around technology in education. She also tags key words within the blog, so just with a click of the mouse, you can go directly to the topic of your choice (i.e. 21st century skills, Apple, collaboration, conference, fear, free tools, google, homework, iPad, ISTE, leadership, learning, literacy, Massachusetts, MassCUE, Microsoft, professional development, redefine, students, teachers, teaching, technology, volunteer, wall quotes, web 2.0)

I subscribe to this blog and look forward to the emails. All you need to do is follow the link and provide your email address. Don't worry! Your inbox won't be inundated with mail from this site or any others!

I have been a subscriber for 3 years now and only receive the weekly blog update. What's nice about this blog is that it's not always the same; sometimes it's just an inspirational or thought provoking quote.

I hope you take the time to check out this out and find it to be a valuable resource. I will leave you with Jean's posted quote of the week:

